Planters in Session

The Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association met in the hall above Castle & Cooke's this forenoon, this being the first of the sessions of the regular annual meeting. There were 37 out of 58 individual members present, but with the exception of three or four plantations, all answered "present." This constituting a quorum, business was proceeded with, beginning with the reading of the minutes of the last annual meeting.

After this came the address of President H. A. Isenberg, in which he ably outlined the condition of the sugar industry.

The Association next listened to the address of Secretary W. O. Smith.

Since the sugar planters formed an organization in March, 1892, regular annual meetings have been held besides several special meetings. This is the 23rd annual meeting.

At the last annual meeting the following named trustees were elected to serve for the year: H. A. Isenberg, J. B. Atherton, F. A. Schaefer, H. P. Baldwin, W. G. Irwin, G. H. Robertson, F. M. Swanzy, B. F. Dillingham and W. O. Smith. The Board of Trustees elected the following officers: H. A. Isenberg, president; J. B. Atherton, vice president; W. O. Smith, secretary and treasurer; G. H. Robertson, auditor.

With Simple Ceremony NEW GOVERNOR Assumes Duty of Office

George R. Carter, within the hour of nearly two thousand people this morning took the oath as Governor of the Territory of Hawaii in the Legislative Hall, the old Throne room, in the Capitol, succinctly enunciating the policy of the new administration and drawing the tumultuous applause of the representative assembly.

Eleven o'clock was appointed as the hour for administering the oath.

An hour before that time the Territorial band, under Captain Berger, stationed in the grounds of the executive building, made music and the steps and hallways of the old Palace were alive with officials and private citizens, ladies and gentlemen attired for the occasion, who were anxious to secure seats in the Throne room, from which they might observe the proceedings.

The greater portion of the body of the hall was filled with seats arranged for the event. Chairs that once graced the chambers of Hawaiian royalty, great, gilded, red-plush affairs, handsome and heavy, and less pretentious seats upon which sat Senators and Representatives of the last Legislature, besides a multitude of still plainer but just as serviceable chairs requisitioned for the purpose, were set ready long before the eventful hour and filled almost as rapidly as they were provided.

On three sides of the hall are balconies, great double doors open from the remaining side into the main hallway of the capitol. This hallway and the balconies were crowded with humanity; every scarlet-curtained window framed faces of men and women intent upon what was about to occur.

every door was jammed when the inauguration was in process.

Under the gorgeous canopy above the dais at the mauka end of the hall, where monarchs of the kingdom once had their throne, three of the high-backed gilded chairs, relics of a dispensation now departed, were ranged behind a desk at which King Kalakaua used to sit.

Sheltered by tasseled curtains the Hawaiian coat-of-arms reposed above, sweet flowers and graceful plants all but hid the soft red carpet covering the steps leading to the dais.

Tall, sturdy palms on either side, guarded the triple seat. Upon the steps were smaller palms and delicate maiden hair clusters of carnations in odd-shaped baskets, their fragrance mingling with the perfume of a great bunch of violets on the desk held in a handsome cut-glass bowl.

Promptly at eleven o'clock the mauka door of the Throne room, opening within a few paces of the raised platform, admitted Federal Judge Sanford B. Dole, former Governor, closely followed by the Governor-elect and Chief Justice Frear of the Supreme Court of the Territory.

At the entrance of the distinguished trio, all present rose and, in silence, except for the shuffling of crowded feet and the clanking of the swords of the military and general staff, awaited the opening of the ceremonies.

Judge Dole first mounted the steps of the dais, standing in front of the chair on the left side facing the audience; Mr. Carter paused beside the central seat behind the desk, facing Chief Justice Frear who stationed himself near the remaining chair.

The Reverend George I. Pearson, standing below the platform, faced the crowd of witnesses and, raising his hand in invocation, sought the blessing of heaven upon him who was about to assume the responsibilities of the Governorship, returning thanks for the benefits showered upon the nation and the Territory in the past and beseeching continued favors.

Then, each with his right hand raised, Justice Frear, robed in his black judicial gown, administered the oath of office, the promise to support the Constitution of the United States and discharge his duties as Governor faithfully and well, and George Robert Carter, earnestly answering that he would so do, became the second Governor of Hawaii.

When the new Governor referred to the glories of American citizenship his remarks were greeted with tremendous applause and when he ceased speaking he was given a great ovation.

Immediately upon the termination of his address, the Governor, accompanied by Judge Dole and Justice Frear, left the hall by the mauka door and the great crowd moved, as quickly as its numbers would permit, toward the hallway, eager to extend their congratulations and to shake the hand of Hawaii's new Governor.
